CASE NO.: 11-08607-R-DTB

JOINDER OF CERTAIN LIMITED PARTNERS OF CP 2, 5, 7, 16 AND 17 IN OBJECTION TO RECEIVER'S FEE
APPLICATION; AND RECOMMENDATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT EXAMINER

[Filed Concurrently with [Proposed] Order.]

Hearing Date: April 2, 2012

Hearing Time: 10:00 a.m.

Courtroom: 8

Judge: Hon. Manuel Real

TRIAL DATE SET: No Date Set

The purpose of this Joinder is to support the objections of the secured creditor and other limited partners to the application for fees by the Receiver on the ground that the objections frame the ultimate conflict of interest that exists between the Receiver and his retainers on the one hand, and on the other hand the secured

1 creditors and limited partners of certain partnerships whose interests are at risk of 2 being forcefully liquidated or otherwise diverted by the Receiver in order to pay his 3 fees.

4 This Joinder concludes with the recommendation for the appointment of an 5 independent examiner to provide the court with an objective report on the status of 6 each partnership, including a cash flow summary of all of the partnerships, a 7 summary assessment of each partnership to reflect whether it is solvent or not, and 8 an assessment of any obligations each partnership may have outstanding to the 9 receivership. This report should prevent litigation over the Receiver's unsupported 10 attempt to force liquidation of all of the partnerships in light of the fact that many of 11 them should not even be in this receivership. By this joinder and the proposed 12 order filed concurrently herewith, these joining parties seek the following order:

- 13 • An order that the Receiver cannot pay itself or professionals that it 14 hires from funds from Copeland Properties 2, 5, 7, 16, and 17 or from 15 any income that said partnerships generate and that the Receiver may 16 not comingle funds of said partnerships with funds with Copeland 17 Wealth Management or any other entity under the instant 18 Receivership. (See Proposed Order filed concurrently herewith.)
- 19 • It goes without saying that the basis of the above proposed order is to 20 prevent the Receiver from commingling un-comingled funds in order 21 to pay the Receiver's fees/costs at the expense of partnerships that 22 have no business even being in this receivership. The joining partners 23 herein understand that the SEC's purported goal is to address victims 24 of Defendants, however, a far worse wrong may be committed if the 25 SEC via a Receiver is permitted to be the "co-mingler" of un-26 comingled funds.
- 27 • The joining partnerships herein respectfully recommend that that Court 28 appoint an independent examiner as discussed below.

1 The reasons for this Joinder and the recommendation for an independent 2 examiner are spelled out by topic below.

3 1. THE RECEIVER'S CONFLICT OF INTEREST IS MANIFEST.

4 This receivership has been in place for nearly four months and the Receiver 5 has failed to provide this court with an objective assessment of each partnership's 6 solvency and its assets and liabilities. The Receiver now seeks to obtain payment 7 of $70,000 from the Copeland Realty bank account, which will effectively 8 eliminate any liquidity in the Copeland Realty entity. The Receiver has now hired 9 law and accounting firms and has his own staff to pay, so the critical concern is that 10 the Receiver will be periodically seeking to draw funds from the operation of 11 partnerships that should not even be in the receivership. Although until a proper 12 assessment of each partnership is done as to solvency, assets and liabilities, it is 13 clear from the data the receiver has included in his past reports and filings that a 14 number of the partnerships are either insolvent or barely making mortgage 15 payments. Thus, under the Receiver's vague "plan" the burden of paying the 16 receiver's fees and those of his retainers will ultimately fall on those solvent limited 17 partnerships that produce positive cash flow.

18 Certain partnerships that have objected in the past to their forced presence in 19 the receivership are CP 10, through Mirau, Edwards, Cannon, Lewin and Tooke 20 and CP 2, 5, 7, 16 and 17, represented by Newmeyer & Dillion. The limited 21 partners of these partnerships believe that their partnerships are solvent and have no 22 material obligations to the receivership but will be stripped of their cash flow and 23 force-liquidated to pay the Receiver's fees and those of his retainers because the 24 Receiver will want to get paid and pay his professionals even if it means taking 25 money from partnerships that do not even belong in the receivership.

26 The conflict that exists in every case where a commercial receiver is 27 appointed almost inevitably leads to an expensive recovery process and a forced 28 liquidation akin to a bankruptcy.

Inasmuch as the Receiver must follow bankruptcy law to the highest degree possible to order the claims of creditors, whenever there are allegations of fraud, the receivers uniformly seek to have the case treated as though it were some form of Ponzi scheme as is happening here. (Receiver's Response to Order on Receiver's Application and Report filed March 5, 2012.) That Ponzi, or "Ponzi-like scheme" theory is an attempt by the receiver to obtain self-serving discretion that may enable the receiver to indiscriminately liquidate every asset he can grab and create a pot from which his fees and those of his retainers are paid first at the detriment of partners who rely on distributions for retirement from partnerships that have no business being in the receivership. Because the certain limited partners of the above-listed partnerships are objecting to their forced inclusion in this receivership on the ground that each is properly registered and managed legal entity with no material obligations to the receivership, the conflict is clear.

If the Receiver were to be ordered to release the solvent partnerships, he fears he may face difficulty in recovering enough other assets to pay his fees and those of his retainers. This conflict of interest is purely financial and it exists in every receivership where the independent existence of innocent legal entities is threatened. As we are positioned now, resolving the conflict requires an independent evaluation to avoid the prejudice that occurs when one party elevates its financial interest above others.

2. THE RECEIVER HAS BEEN PRACTICING LAW WITHOUT A LICENSE.

On February 6, 2012, this court ordered the Receiver to Within thirty (30) days . . . report findings on the validity of any notes receivable held by all limited partnerships as simply creditor and provide justification for continued inclusion . . . in the Receivership.

Within sixty (60) days . . . the Receiver is required to report his findings as to the validity of complex notes receivable and payable between and among other limited partnership entities and the fixed income funds and

1 justification for continued inclusion . . . in the 2 Receivership on the grounds that the cross transactions
3 amount to actual commingling such that the entities 4 require a Receiver to unwind.

5 A copy of that order is attached as Exhibit 1 hereto. The order was specific, 6 yet the Receiver did not honor it. The receiver was required to file reports 7 addressing the specifics in the order of court. Rather, in his response filed March 5, 8 2012, the Receiver, acting in his own name without counsel, filed an adversary 9 pleading and then, without disclosing it to the other parties, presented a summary 10 order to the court that reads as though all issues regarding the objections of the 11 certain limited partners had been resolved and the Receiver is in full control of 12 every asset, every partnership and every fund in the order submitted to this court.

13 Attached hereto as Exhibit 2 is an article from a professional receivers group 14 newsletter in which this Receiver advertises. The article posits the question by a 15 receiver who finds few assets in his receivership from which to pay his fees and 16 seeks legal advice as to whether the receiver himself may act as his own counsel.
17 The decision of In Re Shattuck, 411, B.R. 378, 384 [2009 WL 2252326 **3-4] (10th 18 Cir. BAP.), in the article attached as Exhibit 2 makes it clear that a receiver may not 19 act as his own counsel where the receivership consists of entities that must be 20 represented by counsel under state and local rules. As in the case of In Re Shattuck, 21 cited in the article at Exhibit 2, this receivership consists of partnerships and 22 corporations and those entities require licensed attorneys to represent them in court.
23 This is not a gray area. It is quite clear from the attached article at Exhibit 2 and the 24 case law cited therein that the Receiver's pleadings and the order he submitted to 25 the court were improper. We respectfully request that the court strike both the 26 Receiver's responsive pleading and the subsequent order that was surreptitiously 27 submitted without the knowledge of those who were directly affected by the 28 receivership.

Further, these certain joining limited partners respectfully request the court

1 order the Receiver to post all pleadings and orders of this court on his website.
 2 This court's order, contained in Exhibit 1 hereto, has been in the Receiver's 3 possession and he knows his obligations under it, yet he posted only the court's 4 minute order which provided no details of the order. The result is that the creditors
 5 and limited partners who rely on the Receiver's website as a source of information 6 have been kept in the dark about the duty of the Receiver to validate the debts and 7 investments of each partnership under the court's order.

8 3. THE INSTANT CASE IS NOT EVEN CLOSE TO A PONZI SCHEME 9 AS TO THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS, IT IS A BREACH OF 10 FIDUCIARY DUTY AND UNAUTHORIZED FUNDS TRANSFER 11 CASE

12 Despite the SEC's unproven Ponzi allegations (Copeland Consented) and the 13 Receiver's unqualified adoption of them, this is not a Ponzi scheme. Unlike the 14 infamous Madoff and Stanford Ponzi schemes that resulted in bankruptcy and 15 federal court receivership respectively, this case is distinguishable in all respects 16 from a pure Ponzi scheme. A Ponzi scheme has no assets behind it. It is all hot air 17 and constant recruiting of new investors whose money is paid to old investors, all 18 of whom accept the truth of the scheme without seeing proof of the investments.

19 In this case, based on a reading of the receiver's reports and exhibits taken 20 from Charles Copeland's accounting firm, as well as interviews of certain limited 21 partners, Copeland Realty as general partner for over 14 separate limited 22 partnerships, under written partnership agreements, properly registered in 23 California and current in all of their tax and other regulatory filings. A few were 24 just tax deferred exchange entities, the remaining limited partnerships each own a 25 single, discrete commercial real estate asset. Most of the partnerships have 26 commercial mortgage debt against them and those debts must be paid. At least as 27 to these objecting limited partners, each partnership was initially established with 28 sufficient additional capital to provide an equity cushion above the mortgage debt.

1 Mr. Charles Copeland, acting through his Copeland Realty Corporation as 2 general partner of each partnership had control of the segregated partnership bank 3 accounts and performed all of the accounting. What is clear from a direct reading 4 of the general ledgers of all of the partnerships, provided by the receiver, as well as 5 the financial statements of the partnerships, is that Mr. Copeland, at various times, 6 took cash assets from certain partnerships and loaned that cash to other partnerships 7 or made investments in other partnerships, all of which were under his control.
8 Those transfers were made with real money and Mr. Copeland dutifully kept a 9 record of his actions, however inappropriate they were. As in many cases where a 10 single person or entity has complete control of the income from many investment 11 partnerships as a fiduciary, and some of partnerships begin to falter in the face of 12 economic downturn, money is often transferred without authority to support the 13 failing investments. That is wrong but it does not constitute a Ponzi scheme. And, 14 as the Receiver noted in his response to this court's order, CP 3, CP 4 and CP 6 15 were allowed to fail. (p. 7)

16 In the adversary pleading filed by the Receiver in response to the court's 17 order that he validate these cross-transactions, the Receiver cherry-picked certain 18 transfers made in the CP 10 and CP 5 partnerships and described them as proof of 19 Mr. Copeland operating the "Copeland piggy bank." If that is evidence of this 20 Receiver's forensic skill, an independent examiner should be appointed 21 immediately.

22 What the Receiver did in his pleading was to mischaracterize the transfers as 23 evidence that Mr. Copeland was pulling cash assets out of all of the partnerships for 24 improper and personal purposes, leaving the investor partners victims of Ponzi 25 scheme. What the Receiver did not reveal to the court is that in all but the 26 receivable and payable debts and investments most recently listed on each 27 partnership's financial statement, which the Receiver did attach to his pleading, the 28 general ledger reflects that most of the cash loans Mr. Copeland extracted from 1 various partnerships in years prior to 2009 were later repaid to the partnerships, 2 especially in the case of CP 5. Those repayments generally balanced the books and 3 are clear from a reading of the general ledger, but the Receiver did not reveal that 4 fact to the court because it debunked the "Copeland piggy bank" and Ponzi scheme 5 argument – an argument he desperately clings to so he can keep all of the assets 6 under his control for forced liquidation.

7 4. WHAT THE RECEIVER SHOULD HAVE REPORTED TO THE 8 COURT BY NOW.

9 Every receiver who has been in business for a while knows how to quickly 10 evaluate the solvency and recoverability of assets in a receivership so as to estimate 11 the worth of the assignment. This appears to be the only receivership this Receiver 12 is managing according to his website www.ethreeadvisors.com. While it is possible 13 the Receiver took this case in order to have an active one on his website, accepting 14 the risks that he might not be paid very much from recoveries, that is unlikely. In 15 the last four months, this Receiver could have but did not do the following:

16 (a) Summarize the cash flow status of each partnership against debt and 17 expenses so as to reflect whether it is solvent or not.

18 (b) Segregate the records of each partnership so that it may be separately 19 evaluated and make those records available to the limited partners.

20 (c) Debrief Charles Copeland in detail to learn the facts and reasons 21 behind his misappropriations of funds from various partnerships for the benefit of 22 other partnerships. This information alone will allow the Receiver to more speedily 23 evaluate both the solvency and the legal interests outstanding for each partnership.

24 (d) Identify and segregate the bank records related to each partnership.
 25 Each partnership is reported to have had only one bank account and the general 26 ledger can rather rapidly be compared to the bank records to validate the incoming 27 investment funds from the limited partners, identify the wire transfers and other 28 transfer funds to different limited partnerships and to other people, including 1 Copeland Realty, for its management fees.

2 (e) Validate the loans made by the four or five fixed income funds to 3 specific partnerships and determine the purpose for each. No loans were made to 4 CP 2, CP 5, CP 7, CP 16 or CP 17. One of the allegations by the SEC in its 5 complaint against Mr. Copeland and his entities is that the investors in the fixed 6 income funds were duped into believing that creditworthy corporate and individual 7 debt would be created and held by these funds. That may have been correct in part, 8 but the accounting attached to the Receiver's reports shows that Fixed Income 9 Funds loans were also made to certain identified partnerships (but not CP 2, CP 5, 10 CP 7, CP 16 and CP 17). In such cases, those loans are an asset which may be 11 recovered if the bank records show the funds were received by the partnerships. If 12 the partnerships that received those funds are solvent, then it is a simple matter to 13 negotiate resolution of the debt obligations. If no funds were received by the 14 partnerships identified herein from the fixed income funds, then there is no basis for 15 forcing those partnerships into the receivership on the false ground that they were 16 beneficiaries of the fixed income fund Ponzi scheme as alleged by the SEC.

17 (f) It is also noteworthy that in Exhibit 3, of the funds loaned out by all of 18 the fixed income funds, approximately 50%, some $2,866,767, went to one 19 partnership alone, CP 4, and that partnership failed. While that partnership failure 20 may be an unfortunate turn of events, it is not the result of a Ponzi scheme that 21 infects every partnership sought to be kept in this receivership. It is an isolated 22 transaction – not a justification for treating everyone alike in this receivership.

23 5. RECOMMENDATION THAT THE COURT APPOINT AN 24 INDEPENDENT EXAMINER.

25 An independent examiner will speedily assess the key facts necessary for this 26 court to determine the path this receivership should take and whether any of the 27 limited partnerships should be held in the receivership under forced liquidation.
28 Because Mr. Copeland kept detailed ledgers and financial statements and the bank

1 account records are available, this is not a complex case to assess. The plan the 2 Receiver claims to be pursuing is not a plan at all – it is by design an improper 3 forced liquidation. An independent examiner's report will provide this court with 4 the basis for directing the proper activities of the Receiver.

5 The court is requested to appoint an independent examiner of the stature of 6 Mr. Ronald Durkin of Clifton Gunderson LLP. Indeed, an examiner like Mr.
7 Durkin, a former FBI agent and CPA who has worked with major accounting firms 8 like KPMG and has performed numerous examinations under U.S. District court 9 order, is the appropriate person to bring this court a speedy and objective report 10 from which to resolve the concerns of the certain limited partners and keep this 11 receivership from destroying the value of solvent and innocent partnerships from 12 which many retired limited partners depend for their support.

FILE DATE: October 18, 2011
TRIAL DATE SET: No Date Set

28 On February 6, 2012 at 10:00 a.m., the Court heard the Receiver's
Application and Report at a hearing in Courtroom No. 8 at the U.S. District Court – Central District in Los Angeles, California.

After reviewing the papers submitted by the parties and after entertaining oral argument, the Court rules as follows:

1. Within thirty (30) days of the date of this Order, the Receiver is required to report findings on the validity of any notes receivable held by all limited

1 partnerships as a simple creditor and provide justification for continued inclusion of 2 such limited partnerships in the Receivership. Should the Receiver not report and 3 offer justification for continued inclusion, the subject limited partnerships will be 4 entitled to an order of court relieving the Receiver from further duty as general 5 partner in favor of a newly elected general partner. Any new general partners are 6 required to file notice of such election naming each new general partner. The Court 7 will retain jurisdiction of undiscovered claims by the Receiver against the released 8 limited partnerships.

9 2. Within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, the Receiver is 10 required to report his findings as to the validity of complex notes receivable and 11 payable between and among other limited partnership entities and the fixed income 12 funds and justification for continued inclusion of such limited partnerships in the 13 Receivership on the grounds that the cross transactions amount to actual

EXHIBIT 2

Ask the Receiver

BY PETER A. DAVIDSON<sup>1</sup>

I have been a receiver for quite some time and know how the system works. I have a case without much money currently in it. Instead of hiring counsel, can I file pleadings in the bankruptcy court or the district court, on behalf of the receivership estate, or do I need to employ counsel to do so?

A new appellate decision calls into question the ability of a receiver, and, in fact a bankruptcy trustee, to file pleadings and represent the estate (receivership or bankruptcy) in federal court. The case holds that only attorneys can appear and sign pleadings on behalf of the estate, which as most attorneys know is the requirement for corporations or partnerships. The case, In re Shattuck,<sup>2</sup> decided by the 10th Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, arose out of a state court receiver for an LLC filing a motion in the bankruptcy court to dismiss the debtors' chapter 13 case on the ground that the debtors did not meet the eligibility limits under Section 109(e) of the Bankruptcy Code due to the fact that the debtors owed the receivership estate in excess of $800,000.00. The receiver filed the motion to dismiss on his own, without the assistance of counsel. The receiver was not an attorney.

The debtors moved to strike the receiver's motion on the ground that because the receiver was not a licensed attorney he had no authority to file pleadings on behalf of the LLC, citing a District Court of Colorado local rule which is similar, but not exactly the same as, local rules for the district courts in California. The rule provided that: "Only pro se individual parties and members of this court's bar may appear or sign pleadings, motions or other papers". The receiver asserted that he was appointed receiver for the LLC by the state court and was appointed to be receiver as an individual and, as an individual, he was appearing pro se.

The bankruptcy court overruled the motion to strike the receiver's objection on the basis that it felt it had discretion to allow non-lawyers to file pleadings and appear in court on behalf of an entity. The court determined that the debtors' liabilities exceeded the limits of Section 109(e) and ordered their bankruptcy case dismissed.

On appeal the BAP reversed, citing 28 U.S.C. § 1654 which provides: "In all courts of the United States the parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel as, by the rules of such courts, respectively, are permitted to manage and conduct causes therein." It held it is "well settled" that a lay person, while allowed to represent himself or herself, may not represent the interests or rights of anyone else. The court held that the statute does not permit artificial entities, such as corporations, partnerships, associations, LLC's, trusts or estates to prosecute or defend in federal court except through an attorney, admitted to practice in that particular court. The BAP cited a number of authorities in support of its ruling including Rowland v. Cal. Men's Colony, 506 U.S. 194, 201-202 (1993) where the Supreme Court stated: "It has been the law for the better part of two centuries ... that a corporation may appear in the federal courts only through licensed counsel. As the courts have recognized, the rationale for that rule applies equally to all artificial entities ... the lower courts have uniformly held that 28 U.S.C. § 1654, providing that 'parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel,' does not allow corporations, partnerships or associations to appear in federal court otherwise than through a licensed attorney".

As to the receiver's contention that he was appearing as an individual, the court dismissed that argument because, "as an individual", the receiver had no personal claim against the debtors. The receiver was not advocating his personal rights, but was acting in a representative capacity on behalf of the receivership estate of the LLC. Because the LLC could not appear in federal court, except through counsel, neither could the receiver. The receiver argued, in addition, that his position as receiver was analogous to that of a trustee of an estate. The BAP held, however, that if a trustee is not a licensed attorney he too lacks the legal capacity to appear and represent an estate in federal court, citing a number of authorities including 9th Circuit and California district court opinions to that affect. These cases state a party may only represent themselves "where they are representing themselves alone, asserting their own personal rights or interests exclusively. If an individual purporting to appear pro se is not the actual 'beneficial owner of the claims being asserted,' they are not viewed as a party conducting their 'own case personally' within the meaning of the statute."<sup>3</sup>

IMPORT OF THE DECISION

While this decision comes from the Tenth Circuit its reasoning appears sound. It has long been the rule in the district and bankruptcy court that only individuals can represent themselves without an attorney. The decision merely applies this long standing rule to a receivership estate, and arguably a bankruptcy estate, both artificial entities. Whether the district courts and bankruptcy courts in California will follow the decision, and possibly apply it to bankruptcy trustees, remains to be seen.

The BAP seemed to feel that if the receiver had been an attorney himself, he would have been permitted to appear and file pleadings on behalf of the receivership estate. While the BAP may have allowed this, the fact that a receiver or a bankruptcy trustee is also an attorney should not empower them to appear on behalf of an estate in federal court unless they have been employed, by either the receivership or the bankruptcy court, to act as an attorney in the case. Generally, receivers and bankruptcy trustees, while they may be attorneys, are not acting in that capacity, and they are not compensated as attorneys.

Both state court rules and bankruptcy rules allow receivers or trustees to be employed as counsel for the estate, although bankruptcy courts are often reluctant to allow a trustee to act as counsel in the case. It appears, therefore, the best course of action for receivers and bankruptcy trustees, when filing pleadings or appearing in district or bankruptcy court (which is merely a division of the district court) is to employ counsel for such purposes. Failure to do so may not only result in the pleading or complaint being stricken, but could subject the receiver to criminal liability for the unauthorized practice of law. Business and Professions Code Section 6125 provides: "No person shall practice law in California unless the person is an active member of the State Bar". Section 6126(a) provides that any person practicing law who is not an active member of the State Bar is guilty of a misdemeanor, and can be liable for civil penalties and possibly contempt of court.
